1. Does auDA's Draft 2026–30 Strategy establish a clear strategic direction for the organisation?

While it does, it is unclear what specifically that will translate as for civil society and academia (as a rough Internet governance grouping here).

2. Will auDA's Draft 2026–30 Strategy support it to deliver on the proposed strategic purpose and vision by 2030? The purpose of the meeting is to Technically 'sort of'. Sufficiently, probably. Ideally? not really.

There's significant assets within and across the Internet Governance community that should be available to under a short list of previously recommended community development models that meet auDA, and the wider Internet Governance position of various Coalitions, to prioritise this approach.

3. Does auDA's Draft 2026–30 Strategy effectively position auDA to meet the operational challenges and capitalise on the opportunities it faces over 2025–30?

There is a gap in perspective and representation to be able to endorse this plan as a member of auDA, Electronic Frontiers Australia, and as a person interested in the goals of the SDG's much like a good day time drama

To capitalize on opportunities, you must be able to recognise them. To do that all the other 'stakeholders' grouped into civil society, academia, and end user, must have shared ownership of this plan.

It's a good start - excellent timing - Come over to the All things in Moderation event and join in the chats.

On behalf of consensus from us there - We are ready to go, we've got governance covered.
